[Course Outline / Description]

The empire of Japan collapsed at the end of the Pacific War because the leaders of imperial Japan started a war that they were not able to win. During the Pacific War that lasted for four years, approximately 2.7 million Japanese were killed. Some of them were incinerated alive or even forced to kill themselves. Many of them died because the Japanese leaders did not know how to end the war that they started. It was the Americans who finished the war with two atomic bombs. It was unfortunate that the Americans used mass killing as a way to end the agony of the war, but it was fortunate that, as a result, the Japanese empire fell. On the ashes of old Japan, the Japanese built a new Japan, which continues to this day. With a pinch of exaggeration, the Pacific War is to the modern Japan as the Big Bang is to our universe. In other words, to understand the start and the end of the Pacific War is to comprehend the origins of today's Japan. To accomplish these goals, this course presents three themes: (1) why the empire of Japan attacked Pearl Harbor, knowing that it was hard for Japan to win a war against the United States, (2) why the Americans dropped atomic bombs in two Japanese cities, knowing that the cities had many noncombatants such as women and children, and (3) why the leaders of imperial Japan did not end the war earlier, knowing that American bombs were killing their people. This course will be a collective intellectual journey to find your own answers to these three questions.

Section 2

[Course Objectives/Goals/Learning Outcomes]

One goal of this course is to help students acquire more nuanced and balanced understanding on the above-mentioned three themes. To accomplish this goal, this course introduces various methods. Articles and other types of writings written on the themes will be assigned for reading. Various audio-visual materials will be shared to stimulate appetite for more knowledge and better understanding on the themes. Quizzes and a variety of group discussion sessions will be administered during the classes. Students will also be given chances to write on the themes on their own in the writing sessions. At the end of the course, students are expected to speak and write about the themes of the course with their independent opinions. They will learn how to discuss sensitive issues such as the U.S.-Japan war and the dropping of the atomic bombs in a prudent and impartial manner.
