【Course Outline / Description】

Painted by Picasso, sculpted by Rodin, entertainers to Queen Elizabeth, Prince Charles, and US Presidents, yet the role and image of the Japanese Geisha has often been misinterpreted outside Japan, and has shaped Western stereotypes about Japan and Japanese women. Being historically closed in a world of secrecy, not many Japanese either have been able to get access to this world with its own rules and etiquette, and with very little documentation.

This course examines the primary role of the Geisha in Japan as an artist and an entertainer encompassing a variety of important social, cultural, and historical elements. Leveraging the instructor's personal connections and research, a field trip to a seasonal dance performance, and conversations with current Geisha, as well as use of academic literature and visual documentation including historical photographs, documentaries and movie representations, this course attempts to provide a complete cultural experience to the Asian and Japanese Studies student on the true role and place of these artists in Japanese culture, and in a traditional world which runs parallel (and yet is completely different than) to the modern Japanese world of manga, anime, and robots.

With emphasis on the Geisha of the five Kagai (performance districts) in Kyoto, this unique course not only explores the historical and cultural elements, but also introduces this relatively unknown and closed world and gives an account of the daily lives of these women, and examines as to why and how the Geisha have continued to survive and remain prominent over the past several hundred years, and as to what is their current and future role in contemporary Japan?

Historical review of origin of the Geisha with clarity and descriptions of the differences between yujo, hokan, taiko-mochi and various types of geisha (shiro, korobi, kido, joro, and machi/odoriko). Discuss impact of Izumo no Okuni on Kabuki and image of female performers. Discuss evolution of the "women of the mind" versus "women of the body."

4. Introduction to (and reception by) European and American audience. Discuss Western stereotypes of Japanese Femininity and Masculinity

4.1. Discuss author Yoko Kawaguchi's exploration of the Western portrayal of Japanese women and geishas in particular. She argues that in the West, Japanese women have come to embody certain ideas about feminine sexuality, and she analyzes how these ideas have been expressed in diverse art forms, ranging from fiction and opera to the visual arts and music videos. Among the many works Kawaguchi discusses are the art criticism of Baudelaire and Huysmans, the opera Madam Butterfly, the sculptures of Rodin, the Broadway play Teahouse of the August Moon. Butterfly's Sisters also examines the impact on early twentieth-century theatre, drama, and dance theory of the performance styles of the actresses Madame Hanako and Sadayakko, both formerly Geishas who were introduced to Europe.

- 4.2. Discussion on contrasting Victorian/Christian values with Japanese nudes photographed by Baron Raimund von Stillfried. In the mid 1800's nudity was not shameful in Japanese society with men and women bathing together. While Japanese photographer Kusakabe and others photographed women in private poses, it was the work of Von Stillfried's photographs that were an inducement for Westerners to think of the Japanese as a more primitive society (as they were often lumped with images of primitive undeveloped cultures.)

5. Golden Period of Geisha (Post Meiji Restoration)

- 5.1. Discuss how as a result of protecting samurai, politicians and noblemen who were successful in overthrowing the Shogunate, Geisha elevated their status in society. Many Geisha were adopted symbolically by noted families to qualify socially for marriage to various revolutionaries, who were now among the leaders of the country. By the mid-1870's, many Geisha were revered heroines and held significant positions in society. Geisha, as a social class became respectable.
- 5.2. Modification of Emancipation edicts of 1872 to allow Geisha to work as entertainers.
- 5.3. Public performances by three hanamachi as part of Kyoto Exposition
- 5.4. Start of Miyako Odori, Kamogawa Odori, and Kyo Odori
- 5.5. Ogawa Kazumasa's public exhibition of photographs where the public voted and the Geisha in this era became celebrities.
- 5.6. Patriotic spirit of Geisha in Sino-Chinese War
- 5.7. Soldiers carry postcards of Geisha in the Russo-Japanese war
- 5.8. Geisha as advertising models
- 5.9. Famous Geisha of Meiji, Taisho, and Showa Era

6. Review of the Burns Collection - The "Postcard Girls" and the "No. 9 Girls"

Ukiyo-e prints granted celebrity status to the women they were about. At the end of the 19th century, photographers such as Ogawa produced images of notable Geisha taking their celebrity to another level. In the early twentieth century, with the development of the photographic postcard, collecting images of Geisha became a Japanese passion. The photographic postcard expands the study of Geisha life. Many of the photographs taken in the nineteenth century were reproduced as photographic postcards. All commercial photographers exploited the postcard format, as it gave them a new market to their images. The photographic postcard granted worldwide dispersions of geisha images.

Since the late nineteenth century, the concept of the geisha has been misinterpreted by the Western world. The novels and periodicals of the end of the nineteenth century misguided the public as to the true role of the geisha. Photographers, who provided images of Japanese women, did not accurately label them, allowing the observer to come to his own conclusions and assumptions. To accurately present the life of the geisha, it is important to differentiate geisha from prostitute. Burns' collection identifies many visual clues distinguishing them.

7. Post-War World of the Geisha

- 7.1. Competition from cafe and bar girls as well as nightclub performers convinces Geisha to abandon modernization and emphasize traditional dress and entertainment and become curators of the arts of the past.
- 7.2. Discuss Film Director Kenji Mizoguchi's portrayal of post-war Geisha and women's rights issues in movies.

Kenji Mizoguchi, one of the great Japanese film directors and in the company of Ozu and Kurosawa, directed many movies during the Post war years sympathetically exploring controversial issues of rights and dignity for women with socially restricted claims to self-determination. As a class, we will discuss three of his movies focusing on the plight of the Geisha:

- Sisters of the Gion (1936)
- The Life of Oharu (西鶴一代女 Saikaku Ichidai Onna) (1952)
- A Geisha (祇園囃子, Gion bayashi) (1953)

8. The Geisha Macrocosm
