Course Outline / Description

This course is designed for students who are interested in international politics and security in East Asia. The course begins by examining the history and politics of the states in the region and how they shape and influence security issues. It attempts to understand the source of states behaviour and prospects for regional stability and instability. Particular attention will be given to the US alliance system in the region, China's military rise, Japanese militarization, politics and security capabilities of North and South Korea as well as Myanmar, Malaysia and the Philippines in Southeast Asia. The course also includes other topics such as insurgency and transnational terrorism, territorial disputes, the Taiwan issue, arms races, maritime security, energy security, transnational crime and multilateral security cooperation. In addition, this course also considers some implications for Australian policy towards the region.

Learning Outcomes

By the end of this course, students will:

- Have knowledge on a range of security issues in East Asia
- Be able to analyse key security and policy changes as well as opportunities in the East Asian region
- Understand and evaluate major theoretical traditions and debates in the international security field
- Build oral presentation skills by participating in class discussions.
- Develop concise writing skills.
